What does Slip Rating mean?

Slip rating, often referred to as slip resistance or slip coefficient, is a measure of the level of traction or grip that a surface provides, particularly in flooring materials. It is crucial to assess slip resistance in areas where people walk to prevent accidents, especially in spaces that may be prone to wet conditions, such as bathrooms, kitchens, swimming pool areas or outdoor walkways.

Anti-Slip Rating Guide

Rectified Tiles

Rectified tiles are ceramic or porcelain tiles that have been precisely cut and ground to ensure that all sides are exactly the same length and all angles are exactly 90 degrees. This process results in tiles with straight edges and sharp corners. The term “rectified” is used because the tiles are rectified to achieve this uniformity.

Rectified tiles are often used in modern and contemporary designs where a clean and seamless look is desired. The precise edges allow for narrow grout lines, which can contribute to a more streamlined appearance. Additionally, the uniform size and shape of rectified tiles make them easier to install with consistency.
